A Fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers, Jim has tried to verdict cases on behalf of clients from different industries in some of the most hostile jurisdictions in the country. While creative business solutions are almost always preferred, Jim is prepared to zealously protect his clients' interests at trial in the event a reasonable solution cannot be reached.

Jim Grant is a seasoned trial lawyer and the former co-leader of the firm's national Litigation Area. He has tried more than 30 cases to a jury verdict or arbitration award and has handled more than 50 federal and state appeals. Some of the largest companies in America have relied on Jim to lead enterprise risk litigation, including complex trade secret and intellectual property cases, merger and acquisition disputes, and class actions. He is a Fellow in the American College of Trial Lawyers.

Over the past 31 years, Jim's clients have included 18 Fortune 500 companies. He has served as litigation counsel for clients in a wide range of industries, including the world's largest software company, an international chemical manufacturer, a nationwide drug store chain, and the world's largest soft drink manufacturer, and companies in pharmaceuticals, financial services, and manufacturing. Jim handles litigation from its inception but is often brought in as trial counsel or to appeal a case following an adverse verdict.

Jim understands that clients win when they achieve their business objectives and begins each engagement looking for a positive resolution that stops short of carrying a matter to trial. When matters cannot be resolved through negotiation, Jim draws on the support of the firm's diverse litigation groups to bring a team with the right experience to every type of dispute.
